My concerns are that my essay/infographic doesn't flow right.

Peer Review

What are some things you think this writer has done really well so far?

I like that you chose an infographic because it is less common on this assignment compared to a slideshow. I like that you went into depth on the author's qualifications, and you also mentioned a potential conflict of interest. I like the style and colors of your infographic.

What suggestions do you have for the writer based upon the main concerns they listed in their original post?

You can fix the issue of your article not flowing well. Since this is a critical review of a source, you first should introduce the source so the audience knows that it is being reviewed.

The Remediation

Has the writer focused on one specific scholarly article?

Yes.

Has the writer made it clear what their argument about that scholarly article is?

Yes.

Has the writer discussed the credibility of the writers of the article they are reviewing?

Yes.

Has the writer shared the main points and highlights of the argument of the article they are reviewing?

No, you could add a section towards the beginning of the infographic that describes some of the findings of the article.

Has the writer provided a citation for the article in their References/Works Cited list and used appropriate/necessary in-text citations throughout their review?

Yes, but the citation is unusually long, and there is a part in it that is not English.

Has the writer clearly addressed what they believe could be "missing" from the article they are reviewing?

No. You mentioned a shortcoming, but didn't mention anything missing.

Has the writer successfully used multiple modes in their remediation?

Yes, but the images don't relate much to the content.

How could the writer improve their remediation?

Change around the flow of the infographic by adding a section in the beginning to introduce the source, and then a new next section to summarize the findings of the source.

The Author's Statement

If they have not shared an author's statement yet, what could they highlight in their statement?

You can highlight why you chose to make an infographic instead of another form of media.
